Chapter 1 by Gabriella Rivera

In a starry night my mother comes in to tuck me in and sing me my favorite song, the nail. The son gives instructions on how to go to sleep, if you dont follow them then apperantly the nail is supposed to come after you. I usually did what the song said but on night i decided to close my left eye first, then my right. I guess it was some type of 9 year old rebellion or whatever, but when i looked over to my left, i saw something. A tall black figure with a long and sharp nail, and it seemed to have only one eye but not like a syclops of anything. Its left eye was left where its suposed to be but it didnt have a right eye. I tired to yell but, i could not it was like some one was stoping me. The eyes and the nail wasnt even the begining of the nightmare, it had a wide smile but instead of the teeth showing it had white outlines of the teeth and the rest was just a dark black. I quickly opened my eye and it was gone but i had he feeling it was still there so i just closed both eyes and covered myself with the blankets until the sun rose up. That night i didnt get one wink of sleep. The night after, i was really curious about the thing i saw so i followed the instructions and after my mom left and closed the door i quickly opened my eyes and closed just my left eye again.
